Dear Friend,

You have helped make reading a fun part of everyday life for thousands of children. By contributing to Children's Historical Publishing Division of Home Based Arts, we have been able to work with schools, teachers and parents to improve the education of children with learning-activity books they love to read. Since 2001, our highest priority has been to serve at-risk children from age 8 to 14. Through community assistance, grants, and individual donors like you, Home Based Arts has provided thousands of books to these underserved children.

Most kids who struggle with reading blame themselves. Day after day, their difficulty with reading can provoke a sense of shame over their struggle to learn what might come much easier for other children around them. They can start to become ashamed of how they learn and ultimately, of their own mind. This is a child who can become lost inside and outside of the classroom. With little sense of direction or activities to build positive self-esteem, what was once a reading problem can develop into a social problem?

Our new book, Haki and The Rule of Law, focuses on why and how children should respect themselves and others in relation to our country's laws and system of justice. A child's sense of self begins in the home with the family. Each member of a family should be respectful of the abilities and rights of other family members because it creates a home filled with peace and love. Most children recognize that their parents are working to enable them to learn and use their talents to the best of their abilities. At the same time, parents must realize that they have a responsibility to use their skills to help their children develop into responsible adults. "The Rule of Law" is at the heart of living well together in the home, school, community, and world.

Our goal is to raise $10,000 to give 5,000 Haki and The Rule of Law books to youth in the community. A donation of only $50 (more if you like) would provide enough books and teacher guides for a classroom of 25 children. At Children's Historical Publishing, we value the fact that how well children learn to read shapes their lives. Please join us in shaping a worthwhile, bright future for all children. Thank you for your help.

Warmly,

Joyce Reid Kasprzak
